MeURLin: URL-based page classification

Min-Yen KAN
National University of Singapore

Uniform resource locators (URLs), which mark the address of a resource on the World Wide Web, are often human-readable and can hint at the category of the resource.

Such categorizations can help in focused crawling.

We explore the use of URLs for web page categorization via a two-phase pipeline of:

- 1) Word segmentation / expansion
- 2) Classification

Motivation:

- URLs are ubiquitous, every web page has one
- Available when the page is not
- Often irrelevant

Algorithms:

Basic: segment at non-alphanumeric characters
Refined: segment at case and alpha to digit transitions

1) Information content reduction: Look for chunking that minimizes  $-\log(P(x))$ . Reduce when the calculated IC less than IC of the URL, as string of characters (certain character probabilities). Similar to Mutual Information. Use program probabilities of words estimated from UC Berkeley's WordSense statistics project.

$P(x) = \frac{\text{wordCount}(x)}{\text{totalWordCount}}$

2) Finite State Transducer based Reduction: use URL to the correspondences in training corpus to chunk & expand URLs in the training corpus, create correspondences using an FST.

Rule #	Description	Weight	Output
1	Match the initial letter in the next token	2	0
2	Match the initial letter in non-subsequent token	1	0
3	Match a subsequent letter in current token	1	1
4	Match the first letter in the current token	1	1
5	Stop a character in the candidate expansion	0	1

Experiments:

We'd like to know the answers to three different questions:

- How good are these URL-only based systems?
- How good is a non-source document based system?
- Does good URL parsing improve full source document based systems?

On the WebKB corpus (49 pages, 4 categories), leave 1 out cross validation

On a subset of the Open Directory Project (10K Pages, 10 categories)

- Random selection of categories
- Hierarchical categories
- Imbalanced of category examples
- Use Information Content for evaluation
- an error on Home Automation worse than on Africa
- mislabeling Aging as Reproductive Health less bad than mislabeling as Africa

Table 2: Category Demographics

Conclusions:

- URLs often contain tokens effective for classification
- Extremely fast
- FST segmentation cannot expand what it hasn't seen
- Better in WebKB task than ODP classification
- Careful URL segmentation boosts classification significantly
- URL expansion helps less than segmentation
- as main architectural components, may mean to the same inference
